Counting Cats in Semi-arid Lands

Since 2006, India rigorously estimates its tiger and co-predator populations every four years, and assesses their habitat status.

Kamakshi S. Tanwar shares her experience and involvement in a counting exercise of the big cat

Challenges Confronting the Gentle Giants in Nagaland

Challenges to conservation of elephants are myriad in a state like Nagaland. Since most of the forest wealth here is not under the control of the government, the onus of conservation and protection of wildlife rests on the communities.

But in spite of all the complexities, all hope is not lost, according to Prajna Paramita Panda
